(Hardcover); 2007 Edition, p. 150) referred to its "indispensable essays." Wide ranging, insightful, and indispensable, indeed. Two chapters that I found particularly enriching were the fourth chapter, "Fiesta: Life in the Subjunctive" ("explores the significance of the fiesta for, specifically, the elaboration of a Christian theological anthropology") and the eighth chapter, "Pueblo and Church" (a Latina's "identity is determined precisely by the intersection of the primary groups to which she belongs"). The final chapter is a rich selective bibliography.
